Habe gerade eben den "Baubericht eines Leidensgenossen" entdeckt.... 🙌🏻🤔🙌🏻

The Roden He 111B was for a long time high on the top of my "to get" list and thanks to a very good friend of mine and a little dickering on services for kind I walked away with one of the He 111B's under my arm one warm and windy March, on arrival at home everything was immediately pushed off my desk in preparation of building this beastie.

Forewarned by the OOT group build of the Pedro when it was first released I knew that the kit had a few "issues" but never in my life did I realise that this saga would spread out over the next 3 months, consume vast amounts of Tamiya putty and keep the local breweries in profit for the rest of the year, then there's the cost of the shrink, the weeks of intensive therapy and the nightmares, oh the nightmares, nights and nights of lying there staring at the ceiling trying to piece together part A into slot B without going whooooowhooooo!

Acht Bauteile und ein guter Klecks Nitrospachtel pro Seite!
